Forecast for Tuesday 28 Jun 2022

Weather: Dry at first, though mostly cloudy. Winds will strengthen through the day with gusts of 45-50 mph possible by late morning. A band of rain will slowly spread eastwards throughout, with first patches of light rain reaching the Brecon Beacons by midday. Into the afternoon, and more especially the evening and overnight there is a chance this rain will turn heavy for a time. Winds will ease during the afternoon and evening though gusts of 30 mph are possible at times.

Chance of cloud-free hill tops above 600m: 30-40% at first, slowly decreasing through the day to less than 10% by late afternoon.

Low cloud and visibility: Moderate to good visibility at first with cloud bases generally above 600 m. This will deteriorate through the afternoon when cloud bases will drop below 600 m with some patchy cloud around 400-500 m.

Meteorologist's View

Strong winds close to or just above gale force will make for poor walking conditions on Tuesday especially at the summit. Though winds ease into the afternoon poor visibility associated with low cloud will see poor conditions continue and paths will become widely slippery underfoot with heavy rain possible.
